"Tell Me How This Ends Well"

What if Israelis were the next refugees to flood into the United States? What would that do to the state of anti-Semitism in this country? That's part of the backdrop of a new,

"wickedly funny" novel by David Samuel Levinson. It's 2022, a family gathers for Passover in Los Angeles.

"Jumping Over Shadows"

A memoir of secret love and the blurry lines between religion, nationality and generations. Annette Gendler traces her gentile family history back to a great-aunt who had a forbidden Jewish lover before World War II, and how that compares to the author's own life.

"Survivor"

Just in time for Yom Hashoah, this coffee table book memorializes Holocaust survivors with stunning color portraits and handwritten memories. This is the result of photographer Harry Borden's five years traveling the world to collect survivor testimonies, through interviews and mementos that have been kept for more than 70 years.

"The Undoing Project"

Michael Lewis unpacks the unlikely friendship of Daniel Kahneman and Amos Tversky, two Israeli psychologists who changed the way we think about how we think.

Their work led to a mistrust in human intuition and opened the door to "big data" as we're experiencing it today.

"Phoenix: Shimon Peres and the Secret History of Israel"

You can never have too many "secret histories" of world affairs. This one fills in some blanks from the Shimon Peres biography and promises to be an interesting look inside one of the world's most beloved leaders.
